What factors influenced results

Toward the end of 2023, the municipal bond market rallied alongside declining U.S. Treasury yields. With investors in the market more willing to take on risk during the last year, lower quality bonds significantly outpaced their higher quality counterparts, despite the elevated rate volatility. High-yield municipals outpaced investment-grade issues by over 5.6%, according to the Bloomberg Municipal High Yield Bond Index and the Bloomberg Municipal Index, respectively.

This market environment generally favored riskier bonds, and the portfolio's investments that were lower in quality and higher in interest rate sensitivity generally achieved the best results. While idiosyncratic security selection was also a factor in overall results, this market period did not produce meaningful credit difficulties, which can periodically be an important factor in explaining absolute results.

At the same time, the fund's limited exposure to certain lower quality investments across a variety of sectors and those with lower duration characteristics detracted from overall returns. This includes several more speculative credit investments that the fund either did not hold or held in modest size that performed well during strong market conditions.
