What factors influenced results

Expectations that the U.S. Federal Reserve would begin to cut the federal funds rate contributed to a notable decline in Treasury bond yields, which pushed bond prices higher. The Fed's potential move comes as inflation cooled, hitting a three-year low in August, and hiring slowed. Mortgage rates continued to trend downwards, starting in May through the fund's fiscal year-end, with the average rate on the 30-year mortgage hovering at around 6.2% in mid-September, according to Freddie Mac. Based on home sales, housing demand remained weak as buyers held off in anticipation of even lower rates.

Security selection within mortgages was additive, with notable contributions from the fund's larger positions in Federal National Mortgage Association and Federal Home Loan Mortgage. The fund's allocation to higher coupon mortgages was also additive. This was boosted further by smaller allocations to asset-backed securities and commercial mortgage-backed securities.

Allocations to Treasuries, inflation-linked bonds and agency bonds were less additive as returns for those markets were outpaced by securitized markets. Interest rate positioning contributed to returns overall, aided by declining yields. In particular, the shorter end of the curve fell further than longer-term yields, which helped returns as the fund placed greater emphasis on shorter-term bonds over the period.
